

---

Kentucky: Louisville — New federal statistics show that more than 42% of Kentuckians 65 and older have lost all their permanent teeth. In the survey by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, Kentucky edged out West Virginia for the top spot in toothlessness. Dentists and other experts say that poor oral health is hurting Kentucky economically just as much as heart disease, obesity or diabetes.