

Erin Louis, M.P.H., CPH

Director, Office of Workforce Development

Assistant Director, Kentucky Public Health Leadership Institute

Erin Louis serves as the Director of Workforce Development at the University of Kentucky College of Public Health. She is responsible for continuing education offered by the college and also serves as the Assistant Director of the Kentucky Public Health Leadership Institute and Program Manager for the Buckeye Bluegrass Regional Leadership Academy. Other responsibilities include developing leadership program curricula; coordinating educational learning summits; facilitating online learning modules; creating peer learning networks; and collaborating with state and regional training coordinators to provide continuing education offerings for public health practitioners. Erin began working for the Kentucky Public Health Leadership Institute in August 2005 as a part-time student research assistant. She received her B.S. in Health Promotion from Appalachian State University in Boone, NC, in 2005 and her M.P.H. from the University of Kentucky, College of Public Health in December 2007. Erin is a charter class member of the CPH certification. She also participates in the National Public Health Leadership Development Network, The American Public Health Association, Kentucky Public Health Association, and Appalachian State and University of Kentucky Alumni Associations.